

Contents

Foreword — V

Introduction: The “Primitive Accumulation” of Revisionist Memory: A Plea for the Partisan Counter-Archive — 1

From the “end of history” to the memorial speculation of a nation — 2

The dominant archive of Partisan Yugoslavia:

Anti-totalitarianism, reconciliation and nostalgia — 14

A plea for a Partisan counter-archive: Partisans of the world, retrieve past fragments of and for an emancipatory future! — 17

Chapter 1

The Three Impossibilities of the Partisan Counter-Archive: Politics, Art and the ‘Anti-memory’ of Rupture — 27

- 1.1 The ancien régime of Yugoslavia prior to WWII: The “prison-house of nations” and economic exploitation — 28
- 1.2 World War II: Fascist occupation and the Partisan uprising — 30
- 1.3 The Antifascist Council for the People’s Liberation of Yugoslavia:
The creation of the Partisan (anti-)state Yugoslavia in November 1943 — 38
- 1.4 Partisan cultural revolution — 44
- 1.5 A theoretical note on the Partisan counter-archive — 57

Chapter 2

Early Partisan Photography, Film and Poetry (1941–1945): An Oath to Past and Future Struggles — 69

- 2.1 Introduction: Armed struggle, armed memory — 69
- 2.2 The Partisan hunger for freedom — 72
- 2.3 The most emblematic Partisan images and gestures of resistance — 79
- 2.4 The poetic counter-archive: Geological research and an anthem to the future — 95
 - 2.4.1 Poems of revolutionary temporality — 100
 - 2.4.2 Geology encounters Poetry: Comradship is bigger than war? — 103
 - 2.4.3 A poem of the “last” struggle — 110
 - 2.4.4 One anthem splits into many: Agitators, women, struggle — 114

- 2.5 Between Partisan film documents and Partisan film
“by other means” — 130
- 2.5.1 Partisan film cases: Lost forever or found after the end? — 131
- 2.5.2 Partisan sounds of resistance as the first film inscription — 137
- 2.5.3 Partisan candid camera — 139
- 2.5.4 Partisan film = photo exhibition + literary script — 139
- 2.5.5 Photo exhibitions with filmic effect — 145
- 2.5.6 Partisan film = design + poetry — 151
- 2.5.7 The liberation of Zagreb, the liberation of cameras — 166

Chapter 3

Continuing the Partisan Rupture by Other Means: From Black Wave Films to Late Modernist Monuments to Revolution (1960s–70s) — 171

- 3.1 Introduction: Partisan struggle as a dominant artistic genre — 171
- 3.2 Against state mythologisation: Partisan film between impossibility and collective memory-making — 175
 - 3.2.1 Žilnik’s Uprising in Jazak (1973): How to make film in a Partisan way, or on the “banality of good” — 178
 - 3.2.2 Popović’s Tough Ones (1968): A tough integration of the Partisan surplus — 185
- 3.3 Monuments to the People’s Liberation Struggle: Revolution reloaded — 191
 - 3.3.1 Monument to revolution, again — 193
 - 3.3.2 The Kozara and Tjentište memorial sites: From resistant and asymmetrical circles to formal rupture — 198

Chapter 4

Undoing the Partisan Counter-Archive? From Nationalist(ic) Reconciliation to the Rehabilitation of Fascism — 211

- 4.1 The new “realm of memory”: A commemoration to victims of totalitarian violence — 215
- 4.2 National reconciliation: Ljubljana’s Monument to the Victims of All Wars and its moral relativisation — 227
- 4.3 From victims to heroes: The open rehabilitation of local fascism in Grahovo — 235
- 4.4 From antifascism to anti-totalitarianism: Brussels’ new pan-European memorial — 239

Conclusion: Retrieving the Counter-Archive Beyond Yugoslavia — 247

Afterword: Concrete utopia lasts forever – Branko Miljković’s Yugoslavia — 259

List of Images — 261

Bibliography — 265

Index — 291

